SUBJECT: TOKYO MEDIA REACTION - CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITS TO JAPAN'S OVERSEAS PEACE OPERATIONS

LEAD STORIES: Most papers gave top play to the fire that broke out Monday morning on a China Airlines passenger jet at Naha Airport in Okinawa.

¶1. "Rules for SDF's Use of Arms Should Follow International Standards" The top-circulation, moderate Yomiuri editorialized (8/21): "It is time for Japan to take a concrete first step toward revising the rules for the Self-Defense Forces' use of arms, which are very different from those of foreign nations.... Under the current interpretation of the Constitution, SDF personnel are not allowed to protect foreign troops who have come under attack; the use of arms for purposes other than unilateral self-defense or emergency evacuation goes beyond the scope of immediate self-defense, which is all that is allowed. The Constitution, however, only prohibits the use of arms as a 'means of settling international disputes,' so the limited use of weapons in joint international missions belongs to a different category.... Japan should relax its rules concerning the use of arms and adopt the international standards that are applied to UN peacekeeping operations. Although the need for a permanent law governing Japan's deployment of SDF troops overseas is increasing, such legislation will not be effective unless Japan eases its rules."
